The Crittenden Press will also be closed today only in observance of the holiday.

Justice Scott gives up seat on court

Kentucky Supreme Court Justice Will T. Scott on Monday announced his pending resignation from the court, saying he wants to find "a higher hill to fight from" without the restraints that are placed on justices. Scott, who has been considering a run for governor in 2015, didn't reveal his future plans in a statement. Scott announced he will step down from the state's highest court effective midnight Friday, ending his 10 years on the court.

The 67-year-old Republican told the Lexington Herald-Leader last month that if he decided to run for governor, he would immediately resign his seat on the court.

Two Republicans already have announced their bids for governor next year — state Agriculture Commissioner James Comer and former Louisville councilman Hal Heiner. Democrats in the wide-open race are state Attorney General Jack Conway and former congressional candidate Geoff Young.

Patriot Coal idles 2 mines this week

Decision puts dozens of local miners out of work indefinitely

FROM AP AND STAFF REPORTS

Two large underground coal mines in western Kentucky have been idled, putting dozens of Crittenden County miners out of work.

Patriot Coal Corp. halted operations at its Highland No. 9 mine and Dodge Hill No. 1 mine in Union County. The mines employ about 670 workers and produced about 3.9 million tons of thermal coal last year, The Gleaner in Henderson reported.

Patriot spokeswoman Janine Orf said in an email message Sunday that "these actions are a result of the difficult coal markets." Sales volumes were lower last year at the Highland Mine, according to the company's annual report.

"A decision regarding future coal production at these complexes will be made in conjunction with the company's ongoing review of strategic options," a news release issued Sunday by Patriot Coal read.

Miners also began receiving phone calls Sunday advising them to not report to work. "That was pretty rough news to hear," said Crittenden County Judge-Executive Perry Newcom of Patriot Coal's decision to idle the two mines. "Who knows how long this will be for."

Newcom has a brother-in-law from Webster County who works at the Highland Mine.

The Crittenden Press made several unsuccessful attempts to contact local miners for comment.

"Right here, right after Christmas," said Union County Judge-Executive Jody Jenkins. This affects "a lot of people from Union County and Henderson County and Webster County and Southern Illinois. It will ripple for quite some time with banks and car payments."

Company halts work Monday at Highland, Dodge Hill mines for unspecified period.

The company's Heritage preparation plant near Waverly and the barge loading terminal on the Ohio River at Uniontown are expected to continue processing and shipping coal from on-site stockpiles.

Hints that a shutdown was imminent came early last month, when Patriot Coal issued a notice required by federal law that said a major layoff or shutdown could come within 60 days.

In the weeks since that notice, miners and officials have been wondering whether a shutdown could be a precursor to a sale of one or both mines, or a mine opening that results in a new, non-union mining operation. The 400 hourly workers at the Highland Mine are currently represented by the United Mine Workers of America.

St. Louis-based Patriot Coal emerged from Chapter 11 federal bankruptcy reorganization one year ago, but

Fire destroys Dycusburg home

A fire that began late Monday morning destroyed the home of 91-year-old Frances Joyce on Ky. 295 in Dycusburg. According to a neighbor, Faye Stinnett, Joyce escaped the home with her help. Joyce had been on the phone with Stinnett when she told her the house was filling with smoke. "We were talking on the phone and she said something was burning on the stove," Stinnett said. After escaping the burning home, Joyce was complaining of shortness of breath, but was treated and released from the hospital. Stinnett said Joyce's son, Danny Joyce, also lived in the home but was not there at the time the fire started. Firefighters from Caldwell Springs, Crittenden County, Fredonia and Salem volunteer fire departments battled the blaze until well after dark, and some were called back to the scene twice to extinguish flare-ups, including one Tuesday morning, according to Scott Price, assistant fire chief with Crittenden County Volunteer Fire Department. Price said the home was a total loss, but the Joyces had insurance. Stinnett said Frances was staying with family while Shawn Stinnett, owner of Bobby Stinnett Used Cars in Marion where Danny works, said Danny was spending nights for now at the business. Faye Stinnett said the community of Dycusburg will soon be hosting a benefit to help the Joyces with their losses. Donations can now be made online at GoFundMe.com by searching for "Joyce Family Fire Fund."

Flu, other illnesses slamming area hard

STAFF REPORT

Over the last few weeks and prior to the Christmas break, flu and other illnesses have been keeping children out of school, adults from work and health care workers busy.

Robin Curnel, chief nursing officer at Crittenden Health Systems, said the hospital has been very busy the last couple of weeks treating patients with flu-like symptoms as well as those suffering from a stomach virus.

"Both are going around," she said. "It's a bit unusual for Christmastime."

Meantime, Stephanie Mundy, an advanced practice registered nurse (APRN) at Marion Physicians Clinic, said her office has treated a high number of patients with the flu, strep throat and upper respiratory infections.

"We've been covered up with them for about three weeks," she said Monday.

On Tuesday, Kentucky's flu activity level was rated at regional, a step below widespread,

Hard winter, Rogers' election victory top news of 2014

STAFF REPORT

A review of the previous year's top stories just wouldn't seem complete without Mother Nature making an appearance.

After enduring multiple wintry precipitation events and bitter cold in December 2013, Old Man Winter was relentless in the new year. Last January, a record deep-freeze that affected as many as 187 million Americans hit Crittenden County. A polar vortex brought sub-zero temperatures to the county for the first time in many years. Temperatures of minus 1.3 and minus 1.5 degrees were recorded on Jan 6 and 7, respectively. Also during the month, Ohio River ice idled the Cave In Rock Ferry for a period and several days of school were missed due to hazardous road conditions.

In February, with record cold in the rearview mirror, winter wasn't done. On Groundhog Day, Punxsutawney Phil gave an unwelcome forecast of six more weeks of winter. Ironically, on that same Sunday, a snow began in the early afternoon and continued into the morning hours, leaving 4 inches in Marion and varying amounts across the county, shutting down schools once again. The latest in a string of icy precipitation events throughout the season prompted Marion City Administrator Mark Bryant to sum up the feelings of many toward the 2013-14 winter when he simply said, "I'm tired of it."

But winter still wasn't finished in March. The number of school days missed for the year was pushed to 17 due to yet another round of snow and ice. City and county officials called the March weather event the worst of the winter as far as road conditions.

With all the days missed, the final day of classes at Crittenden County schools was initially pushed to June 5, but so-called "snow days" legislation passed in Frankfort before the end of the 2014 General Assembly enabled the local school district to adjust its school calendar to allow for May 30 as the last day of classes. School dismissal for summer was originally set for May 14.

The harsh winter, due to multiple freezes and thaws as well as plowing, took its toll on county roads and city streets. With limited funds to work with, many of the county roads are still in disrepair. Additionally, Crittenden County Judge-Executive Perry Newcom estimated the cost of snow and ice removal to be

Private investor signs agreement to purchase country club

STAFF REPORT

A California man with ties to the area has signed an agreement to purchase Marion Country Club.

According to Billy Fox, president of the club's board of directors, legal documents were signed Saturday in an agreement with James Edward "Eddie" King of La Quinta, a resort city in Riverside County, Calif.

Gareth Hardin, finance chairman of the club's board, said the purchase should close later this month.

Fox said King, who is in his early 70s, grew up in Fredonia and wants a reason to come back to the area for a few months at a time. He said the buyer plans to keep the club private, but will be making upgrades to the golf course and other club facilities.

"He wants to make it the best nine-hole course in this area," Fox said of King's plans for the course.

Hardin said King has also discussed improvements at the pool and clubhouse. Furthermore, he said the buyer has also talked about re-establishing a restaurant on site.

The board had been weighing several options to keep the struggling club afloat, including a dues increase or offering additional stock. In November, the board chose to entertain the idea of selling it to a single investor.

The club first opened in the 1960s. It has operated as a private facility since that time. At one point, there were nearly 300 members. However, the last 10 years has seen a drastic drop in membership. Club leaders attribute the decline to general attrition, the opening of other golf courses in the area and a general decrease in the interest of golf in this area.

The club currently has about 60 members.

"We feel like this is a second chance for us," Hardin said, adding that planned improvements should breathe new life into the club.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Family grateful for community support

To the editor

One beautiful August afternoon, I took off running from my house toward Rocket Arena for an after-church jog. Upon my arrival back home, I noticed that I was feeling somewhat strange. The next thing I knew, I was lying in a hospital bed at Vanderbilt University being told that I, at only 39 years of age, had multiple deadly cancerous tumors throughout my body.

Unfortunately, for me and my family, I was told that I had tumors in at least seven areas in the brain. Some of the tumors were the size of a BB and some were as large as a Concord grape. Within the next few days, scans revealed tumors in the bones and lungs as well.

I was told that I had little chance of living until Christmas.

At best, the professionals said that I might live five years. That would be a miracle that happens only under perfect circumstances. With this in mind, my wife and I embarked on what was to be an epic journey.

Upon returning to Marion, there were already cards and other signs of support on our front porch. Keep in mind, we had only been living there for roughly a month. We were not firmly entrenched townsfolk by any means.

Within the next few months, the people of Marion completely embraced us with the occurrence of fundraisers by the community, churches, schools, etc. I really feel this to be a rare occurrence when an entire community embraces and gives so much of their time, energy and resources to a family they barely know.

Palmer

I was talking with someone the other day, describing how throughout my 40 years I've travelled quite a bit and lived in quite a few towns. I can honestly say that the outreach from Marion (a town that I had only lived a month in) far surpassed that of any other town I ever called home.

When a family like mine is adorned with such a blessing as we have been, it's hard to adequately say thank you.

So, really, the only thing we can do is say thank you from the bottom of our hearts. We are so refreshed by your sweet kindness and giving spirit. If you ever need anything from us, please let us know.

Once again, thank you so much Marion. We love you!

Supreme court reverses decision of Crittenden jury

STAFF REPORT

The Kentucky Supreme Court has reversed the decision of a 2012 Crittenden Circuit Court jury, freeing Ethan Thomas Hughes, who had been convicted and sentenced to 10 years in prison for raping an underage Marion girl in 2010.

Hughes, now 23, appealed his conviction to the Kentucky Court of Appeals, which upheld the local trial court's decision. However, the state's highest court reversed it in November, sending the case back to Crittenden Circuit Court on Dec. 18 where Hughes entered a guilty plea to an amended charge of third-degree rape.

Hughes will be formally sentenced in February. Commonwealth Attorney Zac Greenwell recommended an 18-month sentence based on the plea. The prosecutor said Hughes' recommended sentence will include five years of post-incarceration supervision and registry as a sex offender for 20 years.

The Central City man has already served enough prison time so that it is unlikely he will have to serve any further time based on the plea agreement.

The Supreme Court justices ruled in a 4-3 decision almost two months ago that the trial court erred twice during the January 2012 proceeding. Hughes' had argued that four mistakes were made. They were allowing a prejudicial photograph of the victim to be admitted as evidence during the trial, part of the jury instruction was improperly stated, the defendant was improperly disallowed from calling a relevant witness and that the trial court conducted a pseudo-deposition of a defense witness without the defendant being allowed in the room.

In its reversal, the high court agreed with the appellant that the trial court erred in allowing the photograph and that part of the jury instruction was improperly stated.

Hughes was found guilty of statutory rape of a 12-year-old girl who became impregnated and the victim gave birth to a child.

During the trial, the prosecutor, Greenwell, introduced two photographs of the girl. One was taken of the girl at a wedding unassociated with the case while the victim was dressed nicely and wearing makeup. The second photo was of the victim and her child in a hospital room on the day she gave birth to the child.

The supreme court also took issue with one sentence in the jury instructions. It said the final sentence in the instructions "unduly emphasize(d) the defendant's burden" that he was aware of the girl's age when they had a sexual encounter and she became pregnant.

The case was held under heavy security because Hughes had a history of questionable behavior in the courtroom. He had been removed from the courtroom during part of the 2012 trial because of verbal outbursts. It was during that time when he was disallowed from being in the judge's chambers while the minor victim's testimony had been watched on video. His not being allowed in the room during the video was cause for one of his points in the appeal. The supreme court did not rule on that matter because it said if retried, the chances of that happening again were unlikely.

Following the verdict two years ago, Hughes verbally lashed out at the jury in open court. He also directed comments at the victim and her family, who were seated in the courtroom. He cursed the jury, calling members "(expletive, expletive) whores."

Hughes, who was 19 at the time of the sexual encounter – which he did not deny – said he believed the girl was 16. That is the age of consent in Kentucky under most circumstances.

Judge revokes probation of Indiana man convicted of flagrant non-support

STAFF REPORT

Circuit Judge Rene Williams revoked the probation on Dec. 18 of an Indiana man convicted of flagrant non-support, sending him to prison for five years. The judge said she would consider probation or work release if the defendant proves he has a job and can pay the child support.

Paul Lopez Sr., 33, of Lake Station, Ind., was convicted early last year of owing more than $14,000 in child support payments. He was released on probation more than six months ago yet has failed to pay any of the child support.

Crittenden County authorities tracked him down in Indiana and had him brought back to Marion to face the judge.

- Catina J. Tolley, 37, of Marion pleaded guilty and was sentenced to five years on each of two counts of second-degree trafficking in a controlled substance (hydrocodone). The terms are to run concurrently for a total of five years. However, the prosecutor said he would not oppose a motion for shock probation after Tolley serves a portion of the sentence.

- Lee Ann Vowells, 35, of Evansville, Ind., pleaded guilty to flagrant non-support of her minor child and was sentenced to five years. She was given a pre-trial diversion and ordered to get all the child support claims paid in full and to a remain current on payments as part of the terms of her release.

- Jimmy D. Rose, 27, of Marion pleaded guilty to possession of a controlled substance (methamphetamine), a Class D felony, and possession of drug paraphernalia, a Class A misdemeanor. He was sentenced to three years but awarded enrollment in the drug court program. By successfully completing the program, Rose will avoid going to prison.

- Jayce L. Smith, 29, of Marion pleaded guilty to felony theft by complicity for her involvement in the illegal taking of a set of wheels and tires form a residence on U.S. 641 in Crittenden County. Smith was sentenced to five years, but awarded pretrial diversion.

- Charles Brent Beard, 52, of Marion pleaded guilty to an amended charge of possession of marijuana, a Class B misdemeanor, and was sentenced to 45 days in jail. Beard was originally charged with felony promoting contraband for bringing a marijuana cigarette into Crittenden County Detention Center on March 17. The jail time will run concurrent with a three-year sentence Beard is serving in another conviction.

Clark reflects on 1st semester as superintendent

By JASON TRAVIS
STAFF WRITER

On Monday, the spring semester begins for the 1,320 students enrolled in Crittenden County schools. As administrators, teachers and students prepare to return to the routine of the daily classroom schedule, Superintendent Vince Clark is motivated to provide students the tools needed to be empowered and engaged in their educational experience each day.

Reflecting on his first semester as superintendent, Clark has been actively engaged in providing an opportunity for each student to realize his potential and excel academically.

Clark, who succeeded Dr. Rachel Yarbrough as superintendent last July, said one of the first items on his agenda was to create a dialogue with stakeholders in the school system. Last summer, he surveyed both teachers and administrators to get their feedback on issues relating to education in Crittenden County. One of the first initiatives taken was developing a new mission and vision for the school district, which involved both empowering and engaging students.

Feedback is important to Clark. He strongly believes in order to be a good leader, one must also be a good listener. During his first semester, he made it a priority to regularly tour each school, meeting with administrators and teachers. Those walk-throughs included visits to classrooms where Clark wants to see students engaged and taking ownership of their academic careers.

"I love being in the classrooms. I love seeing what is going on in the classrooms," Clark, a former teacher and principal at Crittenden County Middle School said. "It's very important to me as a leader, and I believe it's important to our staff and students that they see their superintendent in the classrooms, hallways, cafeteria, at the ballgames and after-school functions. Those are things that I've done. Those are things I'll continue to do."

He admits there isn't any such thing as a typical day in school administration and often has to deal with issues that can "come toward a person at 100 miles an hour." He said one of the greatest challenges all school districts face is implementing unfunded mandates and doing more with fewer resources.

Last month, school administrators across the Commonwealth saw an issue involving school funding come toward them at a very high speed. State Education Commissioner Terry Holliday announced Support Education Excellence in Kentucky, or SEEK, funding to school districts would be adjusted in the new year. Clark said last month the initial numbers for Crittenden County indicated the school district might be asked to operate on $18,000 less than administrators thought they would be getting from that funding source.

"Those are some of the challenges I think all educators have across the state right now," he said.

In spite of working on a conservative budget, Clark said his No. 1 goal as leader of the school district is to make sure there is a strong, positive culture where students can learn in a safe environment. He believes success will follow a good, strong culture and pointed to the school district earning a Proficient rating on the most recent state assessment with all schools in the district making gains and the middle school being classified as a Proficient school.

"I'm very proud of our proficiency rating. But we can't be satisfied," he said. "I think our challenge is to continue to grow that and find ways to get better and motivate students."

He emphasized 21st century learning involves applying and analyzing knowledge as opposed to just knowledge-based learning. In addition to students solving problems both individually and as a team, Clark believes technology greatly enhances a student's education. Currently, almost 850 computers and devices are available district-wide for instruction, including laptops, iPads, and a variety of electronic tablets Clark said are important for students to both use to interact and problem solve.

In addition to engaging faculty and staff, Clark believes it's equally important to engage all stakeholders in the community. Student advisory groups have been conducted at each school where Clark spent at least an hour with students and learned their opinions on their educational process. He also held a Soup with the Superintendent function where members of the community were invited to talk with him and learn about the initiatives and state of the school district. In both situations, he emphasized the feedback has been invaluable.

Like his predecessor, Clark said he has a great working relationship with members of the board of education and credits board members for having a common focus of acting on what's best for both the schools and community. He indicated newly-elected board member Eric LaRue would be sworn in and welcomed at a special called board meeting Tuesday.

Parents and community members can follow district updates by viewing Clark's superintendent's blog at crittenden.kyschools.us/superintendentblog. Crittenden County Schools can also be found on Twitter at #TheRocketWay.

As he reflects on his first semester as superintendent, Clark offers appreciation to the community for its support and encouragement.

"(My wife) Alicia and I love Crittenden County. Crittenden County has been good to us and our family. We have two sons that are products of Crittenden County and the school district," he said. "We want to continue to grow our school district and provide opportunities for our students."

McConnell triumphs top 2014 news story in Ky.

By BRUCE SCHREINER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

U.S. Sen. Mitch McConnell's clean sweep in the November election, winning a sixth term and landing his dream job as Senate majority leader on the strength of big Republican gains nationally, has been voted Kentucky's top news story for 2014.

When Senate control shifts to the GOP at the start of this year, McConnell will become the first Kentuckian to lead the chamber since Democrat Alben Barkley pushed for President Franklin Roosevelt's agenda.

McConnell, looking to make his own mark as Senate leader, promised to set a different course after years of Democratic control.

"It won't surprise you to know that I have a very different view of America than outgoing Majority Leader Harry Reid," McConnell told a Kentucky Farm Bureau audience after the November election.

"And so we will be debating and voting on things that are dramatically different from what has been the case the last few years."

McConnell started 2014 as a prime target for national Democrats hoping to dislodge a chief antagonist. Alison Lundergan Grimes, his Democratic challenger, portrayed him as an out-of-touch Washington insider.

But McConnell lived up to his reputation as a shrewd strategist. He emphasized his seniority as an advantage for Kentucky and turned President Barack Obama into his foil. McConnell and his allies repeatedly linked Grimes to the unpopular president.

McConnell defeated Grimes by 15 percentage points in a race that attracted nearly $80 million in spending in the two years leading up to the election, mostly on attack ads bankrolled mostly by out-of-state interests.

Looking ahead, McConnell said he would do all he could to stop Obama's coal-plant regulations, saying over-reaching environmental regulators are "strangling our economy." McConnell offered hope of reaching agreement with Obama on tax reform, trade and infrastructure spending.

McConnell's political triumphs were selected as the year's biggest story in Kentucky in voting by subscribers and staff for The Associated Press.

Kentucky's No. 2 story was the car-swallowing sinkhole that opened in February at the National Corvette Museum in Bowling Green.

The sight of eight crumpled cars toppled like toys in the gaping pit turned into an Internet sensation.

The 60-foot-long, 45-foot-wide, 30-foot-deep hole opened when the museum was closed, and no one was injured. The attention spiked attendance, and the museum cashed in by selling sinkhole-themed merchandise.

Work began late in the year to plug the hole, a project expected to take about eight months at a cost of $3.2 million.

Two evolving developments tied for the state's No. 3 story – the enrollment of Kentuckians for health insurance through the state's marketplace and the legal battle over same-sex marriage.

More than 521,000 Kentuckians enrolled for health care coverage through the state's kynect website in its first few months of operation, Gov. Steve Beshear's administration said.

Kentucky's enrollment performance was held up as a national model, and it earned Beshear a White House invitation to attend Obama's State of the Union speech last January.

Meanwhile, Kentucky found itself in the thick of the same-sex marriage debate when U.S. District Judge John G. Heyburn II ruled in February that Kentucky must recognize same-sex marriages performed in other states.

Beshear hired outside lawyers to appeal the ruling after the state's attorney general, Jack Conway, announced he would not pursue the case.

Late in the year, the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld anti-gay marriage laws in Kentucky and three other states. Same-sex couples seeking the right to marry asked the Supreme Court to settle the issue nationwide.

The next story on the list was U.S. Sen. Rand Paul's continued emergence as a potential Republican presidential candidate in 2016. Paul found himself among a pack of prominent Republicans weighing possible presidential bids as the GOP ramps up efforts to retake the White House.

Other top 10 stories included:

- A horrific house fire that killed a mother and eight of her children in western Kentucky.

- The planting of the state's first legal hemp crop in decades on test plots for research and development.

- Kentucky's quest for a ninth national basketball championship fell short in a 60-54 loss to Connecticut in the title game.

- Democrats held on to control of the Kentucky House, fending off a push by Republicans looking to seize power.

Two stories finished in a tie in balloting. One was the deployment of soldiers from the 101st Airborne Division to West Africa to help build care centers as part of the U.S. military mission to stop the spread of Ebola. The other story was an "ice bucket challenge" that turned tragic when a central Kentucky firefighter was fatally injured when a power line shocked him and another man.

STORIES

close to $250,000. Bryant estimated city expenses at a more modest $7,500.

The Crittenden Press staff selected the extraordinarily harsh winter and its wide-ranging effects as the top story for 2014.

At No. 2 was the election of Brandi Rogers as 5th Judicial Circuit Family Court Judge. Rogers not only was the first person from Crittenden County elected to the bench in the 5th Judicial Circuit, at 33, she became the youngest family court judge to be elected in Kentucky, according to 5th Judicial Circuit Judge Rene Williams.

In the May primary election, Marion attorney Rogers took second in a three-way race for family court judge for Crittenden, Webster and Union counties, leaving her to face top vote-getter Ben Leonard in a run-off election in November. In that contest, Rogers edged out the Webster County attorney by only 50 votes in a race where 12,336 ballots were cast.

Just more than a week after the Nov. 4 election, Leonard filed a petition in Crittenden Circuit Court asking for a hand recount of the votes across the three counties. Though Judge Williams denied re-tabulation by hand, a machine recount was approved and it began Nov. 24. Barely into the second day of a scheduled three-day recount of votes, Judge Williams ruled the process over once the integrity of two ballot boxes in Webster County came into question. The recount, to that point, had revealed no variation from Election Day totals.

Leonard then filed a motion in Crittenden Circuit Court on Dec. 8 asking Judge Williams to "alter, amend or vacate" her order with regard to the general election results in the family court judge race. Less than 24 hours later, he issued a Notice of Withdrawal, citing a need for an end to the litigation.

Rogers was sworn in earlier this week in the three counties she will preside over for the next eight years. At her swearing in ceremony in Crittenden County Tuesday, Rogers donned her judge's robe and addressed a full gallery in the courtroom.

"There is nobody who's going to work harder than I am," she said. "I promise to do great things."

Rogers replaces Judge William E. Mitchell of Clay, who opted to retire from the bench.

Coming in at No. 3, Crittenden County Board of Education remained in-house in unanimously deciding upon a replacement for Superintendent of Schools Dr. Rachel Yarbrough, who took the same position in Webster County after spending six years in Crittenden.

On May 13, the board chose Vince Clark over two other finalists to become the next head of schools. He started on July 1. Clark, who spent the last 23 years as an educator in Crittenden County, formally accepted a four-year contract for the position on May 27.

Other top stories included:

- Crittenden County's new Air Evac Lifeteam base at Crittenden Health Systems became operational July 11. The opening of the medical helicopter base came less than four months after a lease agreement was signed for Air Evac to utilize the CHS campus for its base.

- In what began as a seven-way race for county jailer, Republican Robbie Kirk defeated Democrat Daniel Kemper in the November general election to be the next top official at Crittenden County Detention Center. Interim Jailer Phil Parker, who headed up the jail since August 2013 when he was appointed to fill the unexpired term of a retiring Rickey Riley, resigned his post following the election. Crittenden Fiscal Court appointed Kirk as the new interim jailer until he could be sworn in as the elected jailer on Tuesday of this week.
- The U.S. 641 relocation project continued to make headlines in 2014, with local officials lobbying to return the project to a four-lane highway as initially planned instead of the so-called Super 2 that state transportation officials decided upon the previous year. Local legislators also lobbied in Frankfort during the Kentucky General Assembly for funding of the Fredonia-to-Eddyville phase of the 16-mile, $109 million project. Ultimately, $29 million for the relocation project in Caldwell and Lyon counties was reflected in the four "out years" of the state's new six-year road plan through 2020. The Crittenden County portion of the road is expected to open late this year.

- There were two significant retirements by public officials last year. Percy Cook, District 4 magistrate for the last 21 years, opted to not seek re-election to his seat on the fiscal court. Meantime, long-time law enforcement officer Greg Rushing turned in his sheriff's deputy's badge following a heart attack in May while trying to subdue a suspect. He officially retired in July on doctor's orders after 25 years in law enforcement.
- In mid-November, Tyler Collins of Marion announced the kickoff of his Grow Marion campaign, an effort to legalize the sale of beer and wine within the city limits of Marion at restaurants seating 50 or more people. The petition, once circulated, will need only 237 signatures of registered voters inside the City of Marion to make it to the ballot. The effort has been met publicly with resistance from local ministers.
- On Sunday of this week, Patriot Coal Co. of St. Louis announced that it would be idling two Union County mines effective immediately, affecting 670 workers, dozens of whom live in Crittenden County. The shuttering of the operations leaves the future of Dodge Hill and Highland mines and their workers uncertain.

Ky.'s jobless rate dips to lowest in six years

STAFF REPORT

Kentucky's preliminary unemployment rate dropped to its lowest rate in more than six years in November 2014 at 6 percent from a revised 6.2 percent in October 2014, according to the Office of Employment and Training (OET), an agency of the Kentucky Education and Workforce Development Cabinet. This is the lowest rate for the state since April 2008 when it was 5.9 percent.

The preliminary November 2014 jobless rate was 2.1 points below the 8.1 percent rate recorded for the state in November 2013.

"The labor market has improved markedly in 2014.

The 6 percent unemployment rate is the lowest in over six and a half years," said economist Manoj Shanker of the OET. "The 2.1 percentage point drop in November from a year ago was last seen over 30 years ago. To put that in perspective: the last time such a steep drop occurred was when Ronald Reagan was a month away from winning his second term in office and 'The Terminator' was just released."

Also, unemployment rates fell in 119 Kentucky counties between November 2013 and November 2014, according to the OET.

The jobless rate in Crittenden County fell from 6.8 per-

ILLNESSES

which is the highest level of activity. Google Flu Trends on Tuesday rated flu activity in Kentucky and three other states as "intense."

But as Mundy indicated, it's not just the flu bug going around.

"We've seen quite a bit of pneumonia," she said.

A number of people tend to feel rundown during the rush of the holidays, Mundy explained, which may be a sign of a weakened immune system. Additionally, people tend to cluster at gatherings at Christmastime, making the spread of viruses more likely.

She said medications such as prescription Tamiflu only shorten the symptoms of influenza by about 18 hours. She advises an otherwise healthy person with the flu to simply let it run its course and to "stay in" and away from others as best as possible. However, she did urge that young children, the elderly and anyone with underlying health issues seek medical treatment if they begin to exhibit flu-like symptoms or respiratory distress.

For those who aren't sick, Mundy said proper nutrition to keep the immune system up and thorough hand-washing are two good ways to stave off viral infections.

Flu shots are still available at local clinics, doctors' offices and pharmacies. The flu season in Kentucky generally peaks in January and February.

Meantime, school officials are hoping the two-week break over Christmas will have given many students who were sick before schools dismissed for the holiday on Dec. 19 a chance to recover and quell the spread of infections before classes resume Monday.

"Time is what cures a lot of things, but I've heard it's pretty widespread throughout the county," said Al Starnes, director of pupil personnel and school health and safety with Crittenden County School District. "We'll just have to wait and see."

Starnes said prior to Christmas break, the middle school appeared to be hit the hardest by viruses. Attendance reached a low of about 88 percent. Meantime, the district as a whole was right at 91 percent.

"There are two or three things going around," said Superintendent of Schools Vince Clark, whose wife Alicia is an APRN at Family Practice Clinic in Marion. "We really needed the break."

Clark said students appeared to be on the mend the latter part of the week prior to Christmas break, as attendance was up from the first three days of that week.

Clark said 88 percent attendance district-wide is the point where administrators begin to consider dismissing classes for a few days to let illnesses run their course.

But it's not just the students who are a concern for school officials. Clark said when administrators, teachers and support staff start calling in sick, it puts a strain on the entire system.

Though Curnel said she's not confident that the illnesses will be gone by the time school resumes next week, Clark is hoping for the best.

"We'll keep an eye on it as we always do," he said.

It took many moons to light Marion after dark

Living in the advanced technological times that we do, we sometimes forget to appreciate all the modern conveniences such as electricity. Here is some interesting history about the first electricity in Marion. It's interesting to think that the stores in Marion stayed open so late at night.

Information contained in this article was gathered from information of Gus Taylor and old copies of The Crittenden Press as well as other articles.

The Lights of Marion
Before the dawn of the 20th Century, the lighting of the streets in the City of Marion was the greatest problem before the city council. There was a discussion at each and every meeting about ways and means of improving the system.

At this time, the town was dependent entirely upon kerosene and lamp posts were placed at the intersections of the main streets of the city. The lamplighter was a familiar sight in the late afternoon, as he would go from one post to another, carrying his ladder and can of kerosene.

He would climb the ladder and remove the lamp, and after filling it with oil and cleaning the globe, would light it and replace it on the post. These lights would burn all night or until the oil burned out. The same task would be done again the next evening. Not only was this inadequate lighting, but also it was troublesome and expensive, for it was hard to keep a lamplighter on the job. The dark alley and the black cat were nothing to compare with the City of Marion after nightfall.

When going to church on Sunday night, especially under a dark moon, you would find dozens of lanterns parked in the vestibule or against the wall in the back of the church.

The business houses vied with each other as to who could have the best lit store. During this time all stores were open until 9 or 10 o'clock at night. Some had handsome oil lamps hanging from the ceiling, while others placed their lamps around the walls. However, none gave satisfaction.

In 1899, Orme Drug Co. installed a private electric light system, which was run by a steam engine. In the same year, the R.F. Haynes Drug Store put in a plant that used gasoline and was called the Air-Light System. There may have been other business houses that had private systems for lighting, but they all proved to be very expensive.

The city council continued to work on this problem. At the November 1899 meeting, they voted to offer for sale to the highest bidder the electric light franchise for the City of Marion. Mr. Boyce and Mr. Eddings of Princeton were the only bidders. Consequently, they became the purchasers of the franchise for a period of 20 years at their bid of $25.

To hold the franchise, they were required to put in a light plant within 18 months. Having looked over the situation pretty thoroughly, they thought they would be able to make a contract and have a plant in operation within a year.

They made the following agreement with the council:

- To put into operation said plant.
- To maintain the plant and increase the capacity from time to time as the city may require.
- To plant such poles in the public streets and alleyways as necessary.
- To furnish incandescent electric lights of not less than 50 candle power at a cost not exceeding $2 per light per month in such numbers as the city council may designate.
- To furnish not less than 16 candle power for private and commercial lighting at a cost of 75 cents per light per month for lights not used later than midnight or for 90 cents if they were to be used after midnight.

They were to furnish the globes and wire the houses free to the consumer. The necessary arc lights for the streets were to be furnished for $1,200 per year.

On March 29, 1900, the city council indefinitely postponed action on the Boyce and Eddings proposition to furnish electric light for Marion.

On Oct. 4, 1900, Mr. Boyce again came to Marion to submit a new proposition to the council offering to light the streets for about $600 per year, but when time came for the council meeting, Mr. Boyce failed to appear.

In February 1901, Mr. C.S. Nunn of Marion and E.T. Franks, U.S. Collector of Internal Revenue at Owensboro, purchased the electric light franchise from Boyce and Eddings expecting to begin at once the work of putting an electric plant in Marion. They considered also a water works franchise and made a proposition to the city council to furnish the city 16 arc lights for $1,100 annually and also 16 fireplugs for $1,100 annually.

The city council accepted the proposition, but the final passage of the contract could not be made until the March meeting. When the council met in March, the waterworks proposition was voted down 3-to-1, but the proposition for lights was adapted by unanimous vote. The contractors asked for time to consider the amended proposition and then refused to accept the same.

In April, Mr. John W. Wilson secured the franchise from Nunn and Franks. He called electricians from Cincinnati and Louisville to come and look over the field and help him in making an estimate as to the cost and size of a plant.

A few days later, 10 of the leading businessmen of Marion met and organized The Electric Light & Ice Co. with a capital stock of $10,000. They promised the city 20 big arc lights to be in operation within the next 90 days. The company was incorporated with 200 shares at a value of $50 per share.

The following officers were elected: Tom Clifton, president; John Wilson, vice president; P.S. Maxwell, secretary and treasurer. The board of directors included J.H. Orme, E.J. Hayward, Sam Gugenheim, Dr. J.O. Dixon and Tom Clifton. The other stockholders were Dr. R.L. Moore, Gus Taylor and C.S. Nunn. Mr. John Wilson was in charge of the construction of the power plant, which was built across from the railroad depot.

Shown above, The Marion Electric Light Company was located across from the railroad depot. At first, it would only run at night until it had acquired more horsepower to run during the day. There was a special day in which people with electric washers could wash their clothes. On another day it would run in the afternoon so housewives with electric irons could iron their clothes. Meanwhile, the first kerosene lamps in Marion would have looked similar to what is shown at left. They would have to be filled, cleaned and lit nightly.

The ice plant was to be operated by the same power, and its capacity to be from 4 to 6 tons per day. The plant was estimated to cost from $12,000 to $15,000. The wiring of the homes was to be done free of charge to all who applied before the first of September.

Thursday, Oct. 10, 1901, was a historical day in the City of Marion. On that day, 20 arc lights flashed their rays up and down the streets of the city. The lights gave satisfaction in every way and no town could boast of a better system. Lights were turned on at 6 p.m. and burned all night. The work of wiring houses and homes was pushed rapidly.

On June 23, 1916, The Electric Light & Ice Co. plant was sold to Mr. S.M. Jenkins for the sum of $8,000. Mr. Jenkins continued to operate the plant in the same manner as the original company, giving satisfaction at all times. In 1921, Mr. Jenkins put in two diesel engines. With this added horsepower, the plant was more equipped to serve the residents of Marion.

In February 1926, Mr. Jenkins sold the plant, business and equipment to the Kentucky Utilities Co. This company has constantly improved the system until Marion rates with the best in the state.

In 1941, the Rural Electric Administration (REA) came into Crittenden County. The rural electric company furnished power and lights to the rural districts. The first line ran down the Ohio River bottoms to Weston, to Dam 50 and to Tolu. From Tolu, the lines of the REA went all over the county.

Because of its rapid growth in the county, it became necessary in 1949 to establish a branch office in Marion, and Mr. Clyde F. Baker was sent from Henderson as manager of this district. In July 1954, a new, modern and complete office building was opened on South Main Street in Marion. Now, a new modern, larger facility has been built on U.S. 641 a few miles south of Marion.

Truly, Marion and Crittenden County had emerged into the light of day.

How did America become wicked so fast?

There are shocking facts in this column about 80 percent of American pastors. Read and weep!

It frightens any thinking and caring senior citizen how America has fallen so low so fast. We remember when God was respected by the actions of even sinners, when people feared God, when total religious freedom was ours, when live-ins were a disgrace in the community, when homosexuals were seen as God sees them as reprobates and abominations and when Christianity was believed by most as the true religion and the only way to heaven.

We, as Israel of old, have left God, sowing to the wind and now we are reaping the whirlwind.

The question is, why has America replaced God Almighty with the god of flesh?

In 1831, French historian Alexis De Tocqueville came to America to see why she was so great. The following are some of his remarks:

- "The religious atmosphere of the country was the first thing that struck me on arrival in the United States. The longer I stayed in the country, the more conscious I became of the important political consequences resulting from this novel situation."

- "There are sections of the population in Europe where unbelief goes hand in hand with brutishness and ignorance, whereas in America, the most free and enlightened people in the world zealously perform all the external duties of religion."

- "I sought for the key to the greatness and genius of America in her harbors...in her fertile fields and boundless forests; in her rich mines and vast world commerce; in her public school system and institutions of learning. I sought for it in her democratic Congress and in her matchless Constitution."

- "Not until I went into the churches of America and heard her pulpits flame with righteousness did I understand the secret of her genius and power."

- "America is great because America is good, and if America ever ceases to be good, America will cease to be great."

He also told of being in the County of Chester in New York State where a witness was called to testify. He did not believe in the existence of God and the immorality of the soul. The judge refused to allow him to be sworn in on the grounds that the witness had destroyed beforehand all possible confidence in his testimony. The judge said he did not know that there even was an atheist in America.

De Tocqueville further stated: "For the Americans, the ideas of Christianity and liberty are so completely mingled that it is almost impossible to get them to conceive of the one without the other."

He was amazed how people were well educated on American history, her government and how it worked and were so knowledgeable in the Word of God.

Forty-two years later, a solemn warning was given to America and her pastors from a famous preacher, Charles G. Finney, in his prophetic "Decay of Conscience" message. It gives all of the world the answer to the question in the heading of this column.

"Brethren, our preaching will bear its legitimate fruits. If immorality prevails in the land, the fault is ours in a great degree. If there is a decay of conscience, the pulpit is responsible for it. If the public press lacks moral discrimination, the pulpit is responsible for it. If the church is degenerate and worldly, the pulpit is responsible for it. If the world loses its interest in religion, the pulpit is responsible for it. If Satan rules in our halls of legislation, the pulpit is responsible for it. If our politics become so corrupt that the very foundations of our government are ready to fall away, the pulpit is responsible for it.

"Let us not ignore this fact, my dear brethren; but let us lay it to heart, and be thoroughly awake to our responsibility in respect to the morals of this nation."

The longest serving member of the U.S. Congress was Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd. On June 27, 1962, just two days after the Supreme Court stopped school prayer, Sen. Byrd addressed Congress, saying, "Inasmuch as our greatest leaders have shown no doubt about God's proper place in the American birthright, can we, in our day, dare do less?"

He then listed all the buildings in Washington that have scriptures on them and how prayers are offered to open Congress and the Supreme Court. He then concluded by saying, "On the south banks of Washington's tidal basin, Thomas Jefferson still speaks, 'God who gave us life gave us liberty.' Can the liberties of a nation be secure when we have removed a conviction that these liberties are the gift of God? Indeed, I tremble for my country when I reflect that God is just, that his justice cannot sleep forever. Jefferson's words are a forceful and explicit warning that to remove God from this country will destroy it."

President Ronald Reagan said, "If we ever forget that we are One Nation Under God, then we will be a nation gone under."

How very true are both statements.

The atheists, communists and the Left have been faithful to Satan's command to fill the gigantic void the pastors have opened for them.

A Barna survey found that 90 percent of pastors surveyed believe the Bible says a lot about pressing political and social issues, but less than 10 percent actually preach about such topics.

Sam Rohrer, president of American Pastors Network, said, "When those in the pulpit choose not to preach the controversial portions or the portions that really affect our culture and the people in the pew, when that is done, confusion reigns."

He then said, "And I would say that the pastors in the pulpit have sinned, and they're going to have an awful lot to answer to before God himself when they stand before him."

An article from OneNews-Now.com said the Barna study "suggests that pastors do not want to offend people and want their congregations to leave feeling warm and fuzzy, so they fail to preach about sin, 'about the necessity of living a righteous life, making biblically obedient decisions, because they tend to be uncomfortable, those challenge us,' the APN president submits. "But that is what the Word of God is to do. When that happens the culture will suffer the results."

Another frightening list just released by the National Congregations Study shows that 48 percent say their church leaders allow gays and lesbians as full-fledged members, 26.4 percent say volunteer leadership positions in their church are open to gays and lesbians and 23.5 percent attend a white conservative church that accepts gay and lesbian members. To call those churches "conservative" shows just how sick the minds of those are that do so.

No wonder the pastors won't preach about sin.

Remember, "Have no part in another man's sins, but rather reprove them."

That's a wonderful way to start the new year in order for God to restore this nation to its once goodness and greatness.

'In God We Trust' signs now in capitol

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
State lawmakers will debate legislation in committees this year beneath "In God We Trust" signs.

The Lexington Herald-Leader reports state officials hung the new signs in 11 committee rooms in the Capitol and Capitol Annex, where legislators have offices and meeting rooms. Republican Senate President Robert Stivers said the signs were paid for with private donations, not taxpayer dollars.

The ACLU of Kentucky and Americans United for the Separation of Church and State are not happy about the signs, but say there is little chance a judge would order them removed.

"We just believe that government is supposed to represent everyone – the religious and non-religious," said Rob Boston, communications director for the Washington-based Americans United for Separation of Church and State.

Legislators approved the signs last year by passing an amendment sponsored by GOP state Sen. Albert Robinson of London. Similar signs already hang in the state House and Senate chambers.

Caregivers need to take care of themselves too

Make time for yourself a priority

A new year always brings its share of resolutions aimed to improve our health, body and mind. As a caregiver, the most important resolution you can make is to take time for yourself. When you take care of yourself, you will be healthier, have more energy and enthusiasm to keep on caregiving and feel better about yourself overall. Here are some tips on how to carve out some "me" time in the next year. -Take an hour of each day to do things you enjoy like exercising, reading, spending time with loved ones, engaging in a hobby or doing nothing.

-Make your own health a priority. Exercise, eat a balanced diet, get enough sleep, balance stress and receive an annual medical checkup. -Attend or start a caregiver support group. -Adapt, as needed, the things you used to do with the person you are now caring for. Ideas include renting a movie instead of viewing a live theatrical performance, holding hands and listening to music instead of dancing, and looking at photos if traveling is no longer possible. -Be strong, smart and brave enough to ask for help. -Tell your loved one how much they mean to you. -Use respite services to take a break from the demands of caregiving.

-Find the joy in caregiving by relishing the small things like a hug, knowing smile or shared laugh with your loved one. A lesson in etiquette

Crittenden County Elementary School fourth-graders participate in a program entitled "Manners Are Cool" prior to the holiday season. Extension Homemakers have provided this annual training for 14 years. Topics include table manners, technology, correspondence and introductions. Each student receives a drawstring cinch sack along with take-home materials covering subjects learned. Sarah Ford, Crittenden County Extension Homemaker president, assists students who are role-playing, introducing a parent to a teacher, including (from left) Deacon Holliman, Carson Montalta and Brylee Conyer. Additional Extension Homemakers and Extension Service staff assisting with the program include Darl Henley, Janet Stevens, Meredith Hall and Nancy Hunt.

Long-time teacher, administrator and coach Mike Riley of Salem was honored recently during a ceremony at Livingston Central High School for his many years of dedication and allegiance to the school system. Riley graduated from Livingston in 1971 where he played basketball and baseball. He became a member of the school faculty in 1975 and served for the next 33 years as a teacher and administrator. During his tenure Riley was the school principal, athletic director and coached baseball and basketball. He coached basketball for 22 years, half of those seasons as head coach and was the Cardinals baseball coach for 18 seasons. He won seven Fifth District championships as head coach and his teams played 22 times at the post-season regional level. The school dedicated the No. 10 baseball jersey to Riley and gave him a framed keepsake marking the recognition. Pictured are (from left) Matt Hargrove, an LCHS teacher who played for Riley and now coaches in the system; Riley; LCHS Principal Scott Gray and Superintendent Darryl Chittenden.

New AmeriCorps reps enjoy work at CCES

By JASON TRAVIS
STAFF WRITER

It's a program that focuses on service to others while giving its members an opportunity to enhance their lives as they give back to the community. Referred to as the stateside equivalent of the Peace Corps, AmeriCorps engages more than 75,000 individuals in service each year through non-profits, schools, public agencies and community and faith-based groups across the country.

Locally, three new AmeriCorps members have joined Crittenden County Elementary School during the current school year. They are Wendy Williams, Steven James and Crissy Williams.

A native of Crittenden County, Wendy Williams began working as an AmeriCorps member at CCES in September. Williams, who previously worked as a substitute teacher, learned about the open AmeriCorps position available at CCES.

"Several women here who are employed at the school now went through the program also and they absolutely loved it," she said. "So I did consider it, and said yes. And I love it."

Williams enjoys working with children of all ages and helps in kindergarten through fifth-grade. She stressed it's not only important to help students with their education, but to provide encouragement in other areas not related to academics, such as self-esteem.

Like most AmeriCorps members, she works one-on-one with students on a variety of tasks. She also assists teachers in the classroom as needed and works with groups of students in helping them develop reading and math skills.

"I enjoy being here every day working with the children," she said.

In addition to coaching cheerleading, as an AmeriCorps member, she is involved in other activities that benefit the community. A build-a-bed project will soon be under way, where beds are built and delivered to children in the community who do not have beds to sleep in.

Steven James has been an AmeriCorps member at CCES since August. Originally from Virginia, James works with students in all grade levels in special education. He also enjoys working with students one-on-one and said being a member of AmeriCorps doesn't feel like a job.

"I wake up and say, 'I get to go to school today.' It's a fun thing for me," James said.

In addition to the gift of helping others, James was especially moved when one of the students actually presented him with a Christmas gift before winter break.

Newly engaged over the Christmas season, James said his experience working at CCES as an AmeriCorps representative is only the beginning of his career in education.

"I joined AmeriCorps so I could get some experience working with the students because I want to be a teacher eventually," he said. "I definitely see myself becoming a teacher and, hopefully, going through college and getting a professorship. I definitely want to go all the way with this."

Crissy Williams began as an AmeriCorps representative in November but was a volunteer at the school before joining the program. Born and raised in Crittenden County, Williams previously held a career in the banking industry for 13 years. She graduated from Murray State University with a business degree. She later became a stay-at-home mom before her youngest daughter began attending school.

thing to make a difference," she said, indicating that while she doesn't plan to pursue a career in education, her work at the elementary school is rewarding because it allows her to give back to the community.

"I enjoy working with the children and helping them," she said. "They have taught me probably as much as I have taught them."

At the heart of the AmeriCorps program is service to the local community. Williams echoed that sentiment.

"You have to want to serve and help," she said. "I think it's something that has to be in you to want to help people."

Since the program's founding in 1994, more than 900,000 AmeriCorps members have contributed more than 1.2 billion hours in service across America while providing much needed assistance to the communities in which they work.

Farmers Bank donates to local booster organization

STAFF REPORT

Touchdowns turned into cash for Crittenden County's county-wide booster organization.

Farmers Bank & Trust Co. recently donated $100 for each of the 17 touchdowns the high school Rocket football team scored at home this season.

For a number of years, the bank has contributed $100 for each touchdown to the Jake Hodge Scholarship Foundation. At the foundation's suggestion that the bank's contributions benefit other organizations, the bank changed the beneficiary to the Crittenden County Booster Organization Inc. (CCBO), which governs fundraising efforts of 17 committees.

The bank will continue to donate to the CCBO during basketball season by contributing $10 for each 3-point basket made by the high school Rockets and Lady Rockets during home basketball games this season.

CCBO was developed in 2013 to oversee fundraising efforts and provide liability insurance for all school-affiliated booster committees, ranging from the Crittenden County Elementary School PTO to all Crittenden County High School athletic clubs.

CCBO is a 501(c)(3) organization that is managed by a volunteer board and representatives from each of the 17 committees represented.

Record start ends Tourney host bumps Rockets out of undefeated's hot seat

STAFF REPORT
HODGENVILLE, Ky. – Rocket coach Denis Hodge always seems to find the silver lining.
His Crittenden County basketball team lost Tuesday for the first time in nine games, but Hodge found something to take from it. Despite falling 57-47 to the host team in the semifinals of the National Guard Holiday Classic at LaRue County, Hodge wasn't too distressed.
He knows that taking on the school having the tournament can be very challenging. On top of that, the loss may have taken a bit of pressure off his boys, who reeled off a record-setting start to the season.
"Now we can just focus on one game at a time and not be worrying about streaks or records," Hodge said.
LaRue County (4-5) got away with some bumping and pushing, drawing the whistle just eight times in the contest. Yet, Hodge said that's to be expected.
"Going up against the host team, you have to learn to fight through it," he said.
Crittenden played Carroll County in Wednesday's consolation match. Results were unavailable at press time.
Landon Young led the way against LaRue with 17 points and Colby Watson had 13. The night before Young scored 26 and was named National Guard Player of the Game in a win over Cumberland County.

The Rockets were in control of that one from start to finish, leading by double figures most of the way. Crittenden was up almost 20 in the second half and everyone on the bench got in on the action. Cumberland is winless this season.

Lady Rockets win 2 of 3 at tourney; Oliver gets Big K

STAFF REPORT
Lady Rocket skipper Shannon Hodge has been at this business for 22 seasons. So when something totally different comes into play, she focuses on it with full attention.
On Tuesday, her Crittenden County girls' basketball team captured fifth place – or more flatteringly the championship of the consolation bracket – at the FSNB Christmas Classic at Russellville.
And here's the kicker. The Lady Rockets beat next-door neighbor and heated rival Livingston Central 59-50 in the final game. Now, playing Livingston (5-5) in a big-game setting is nothing new. Quite frankly, it's pretty common. This year, for example, Crittenden could see them five times.
What was unique is that this game was played in an almost empty gym on a neutral floor.
"It was just us and them. That Sixth Man wasn't a factor," coach Hodge said. "I wanted to see what this meant to us. To our girls."
She found out because it was perhaps the most physical the Lady Rockets have played this season en route to an 8-2 start that has been a pleasant surprise to Hodge and the team's followers.
Senior Chelsea Oliver scored 23 and classmate Mallory McDowell had a dozen as Crittenden led by 12 at the half then fended off a late Livingston run. The Lady Rockets made 7-of-8 foul shots in the final minute to pull away after Livingston was within two with 52 seconds left.

Oliver scored 57 points in three games at Russellville, including her career 1,000th. Coach Hodge was pleased with Oliver's play, and the rest of her starters. She was just as pleased with the girls off her bench, who scored 10 points against Livingston and 12 against Russellville.
Livingston's Hannah Leidecker got into foul trouble and scored just five points in limited time. Kalynn Campbell shot well and led Livington with 16 points.

Oliver reaches
Oliver's 1,000th career point couldn't have come at a more opportune moment. When she scored a putback with 2:21 left in the second period, Central Hardin was ahead by eight.
However, the pause in the action to present Oliver with the game ball – which she duly took into the stands for her mom and dad Cathy and Joey Oliver – helped change the momentum. From there, Crittenden went on a 19-3 run and never looked back.
In the fourth period, the Rocket girls led by as many as 10 points over winless Central Hardin and cruised to an easy win despite many struggles to start the game.
"It took us a while to get going, but basketball is a game of spurts and runs," Coach Hodge said.

Manned out by Russellville
The host team treated the Lady Rockets with contempt in the first game of the FSNB Christmas Classic. Russellville's 3-2 zone wasn't too hard on the Lady Rockets who managed a 31-all halftime tie, but when Russellville switched to a tight man-to-man defense in the third period, it frustrated the Crittenden girls and CCHS got just five points that quarter.
Crittenden had led by two in the first half, but Lady Panther sophomore Loreal Cheaney was unstoppable. The left-handed forward scored 19 in the first half en route to a game-high 27. Russellville coach Calvin Head said Cheaney's mother, Sarah (Higgins) Cheaney played basketball at Murray State in 1990s. Cheaney only missed two shots the entire game.
Foul trouble and poor shooting also plagued the Lady Rockets.

They missed several layups and Chelsea Oliver and Mallory McDowell worked the second half in foul trouble. Both played limited minutes, but McDowell was the only casualty to fouls. She left the game with just under three minutes to go.
Oliver finished with 19 points, and Cassidy Moss got 10. Meredith Evans came off the bench to score eight, including seven in the second period helping the Lady Rockets take their only lead of the game.
Although Russellville led most of the way, its biggest margin was no more than five until final period.
Crittenden 59, Livingston 50

Boys, girls sweep 5th wins at Livingston

STAFF REPORT
It may very well be the best start in school history. For certain, the Rockets' 7-0 record out of the chute is the best December beginning in more than 50 years. And perhaps for the first time ever, the Crittenden County boys and girls are simultaneously 3-0 in the Fifth District and leading the standings outright.
Both CCHS teams won at Livingston Central Dec.19.
The Rockets fended off a young, but pesky Livingston Central squad Friday night with offensive catalyst Landon Young in foul trouble most of the game. Crittenden won 59-41 as Noah Hadfield came off the bench to lead the way with 15 points.
Crittenden's girls (6-1) won a nail-biter, closing out Livingston in the final seconds to win 42-40 thanks to a couple of late foul shots and some good defense down the stretch.
In the boys' game, Hadfield was on fire at times. He scored 10 points in the second period alone, knocking down a couple of threes and helping extend Crittenden's early lead to 13 points.

Livingston paid particular attention to trying to stop Young's hot-handed scoring. The senior went into the bout average 24 points, but the Cardinals' box-and-one defense kept a defender in his face the entire game. The extra attention frustrated Young a bit and he stayed in foul trouble, eventually leaving with just under five minutes to play with five personals.
Colby Watson, the team's second leading scorer, struggled from the floor, too. He finished with eight points and Young had just five. With those two posting sub-par nights offensively, Hadfield, Dylan Hicks and Noah Dickerson stepped up their games. Hicks hit some timely foul shots late and a first-half three that sparked a crucial run. He finished with 11 and Dickerson had nine.
Crittenden scored 17 of its 23 fourth-quarter points at the line to finish off the victory.
Mallory McDowell, who was sick with flu-like symptoms just two days earlier, was the inspiration for the Lady Rocket victory at Smithland. She had two key threes in the game and finished with 11 points. Cassidy Moss led the scoring with a dozen and Chelsea Oliver had 10.

Crittenden led early by eight but Livingston's zone defense frustrated the CCHS girls as the Lady Cardinals clawed their way back behind Kalynn Campbell's long-range shooting in the second period. LCHS took its first lead in the second period and led by as many as six in the third quarter before Crittenden closed the gap in the final two minutes.
McDowell stole the ball off Livingston's point and went the distance for a layup to tie the contest at 40 with just under a minute to go. Crittenden took its first lead of the second half with 10 seconds left when Oliver dropped in the front end of a two-shot chance at the charity stripe. She missed the second one and Livingston rebounded, but turned the ball over once the Cardinal girls had pushed the ball into their front court. There were just three seconds left at that juncture and a last-ditch foul let Crittenden score another point at the line just before time expired.
